THE UNION INSURANCE SOCIETY OF CANTON, LIMITED.

NOTICE is hereby given that an EXTRAORDINARY GENERAL MEETING of the UNION INSURANCE SOCIETY OF CANTON, LIMITED, will be held at the Society's Head Office, Hongkong, on FRIDAY, the 27th day of October, 1882, at 3.15 P.M., when a Resolution will be proposed for the purpose of amending and adding to the existing Articles of Association shots were fired again at the forehead of the poor brute who to the last refused to succumb, until eventually despatched by a ball delivered in the region of its heart. This act of ignorance as to the anatomy of the African bear, was severely commented upon by the "vox populi," and many articles appeared in the various newspapers for some time after the deed had been done.

While on a visit to Elopura, a small settlement now daily increasing in size, situated at the entrance of the fine and extensive harbour of Sandakan, we met a petty native chief who had killed no less than six elephants with his own hand; but whether he performed this great feat with some firearm borrowed for the purpose, or, as is more probable, by the native mode of spearing them in the belly, and then tracking the wounded animal and spearing it again when an opportunity is repeated, deponent sayeth not. The latter, however, is by far the most general plan, although the identical elephant-gun that Sir Samuel Baker used so successfully in his famous African travels, and is best known to the public as "the Jaby," was at that time actually in the possession of his excellency the Governor of Borneo. Good firearms are very scarce articles among the natives, who are mostly too poor to possess more weapons than their national Arif and a single spear. Moreover, few of them are to be trusted with the use of so valuable an instrument as a good gun. An elephant thus wounded by spears of the hunter is often followed for several days before it eventually succumbs to the many wounds given by its untiring and relentless pursuers.

Notwithstanding the denseness of the undergrowth in the vast forests that cover the north-east of Borneo, like Caesar of old the elephants seem to be first-rate engineers in making for themselves open paths through all obstruction, choosing the higher ground generally for these curious imitations of civilised power. By this custom they are enabled to render themselves more accessible to the only real enemy they possess in so secure a retreat that it may safely be assumed that man, and probably man alone, makes them his prey. For woodcraft, in all its branches, there could be no better school in the world for the Malay hunters than the jungle in which they are born and bred. And apt pupils they can prove themselves to be when compelled to rely on their own resources; otherwise, more indolent, self-satisfied, laissez-faire children of nature it would be hard to find, either in the wildest parts of Africa or amongst the now nearly extinct tribes of the northern states of America.

But to return to our big game. It is a curious fact that there are few of the feline race of any size in this end of Borneo. Tigers are rare in the northern parts, but far more numerous in the southern extremities: aravancore with the leopard, too, is an unusual occurrence. The two-horned rhinoceros, a specimen of which is occasionally killed, is also found in the same haunts with the bison or wild cattle peculiar to Borneo. Nor must the Malay sambar be omitted—all these animals frequenting the feeding grounds together with the elephants, and often in herds of considerable size. The true crocodile, in its largest dimensions, inhabits the numerous rivers of Borneo, but from the frequent way in which the elephants appear to cross and recross the very streams occupied by these brutes, it may be inferred that even the baby elephant is looked on as being too massive a prey to be attacked with impunity, protected always, as it is sure to be, by so fond and formidable a parent as the female proves in time of need.

On first visiting the neighbourhood of Sandakan, at the suggestion of one of the leading residents, we offered a reward of one dollar to the native who would show us the fresh impression of an elephant's footmark, and five dollars to the man who would make us directly within shot of "it," but the offer did not produce any satisfactory results.

We were then hunting on the rivers, and visiting feeding grounds, which were partially cleared patches of sword grass, a favorite pasture for the many herbivorous animals that come to graze on it during the cool hours of the night, and which retire for the day to the quiet and shady seclusions of the deepest parts of the surrounding cover, in which shelter they rest till night comes round again.

It is one of the leading characteristics of the wandering and broken-up tribes of the Malay race to select a small portion of the jungle most suitable for their few and frugal requirements, where the soil is naturally most productive, and, above all, where they are conveniently close to water on which their canoes can travel. Consequently, most of the settlements are situated on the banks or mouth of a stream, and there these wanderers remain until they are driven out by more powerful neighbours, or by the scourge inflicted by some malarious and infectious disease, when they again move to seek a safer and a healthier spot. In the clearings made by these changes does the game resort, and here, then, must the hunter wait in anxious to obtain a shot. The best chances are afforded either by twilight (early morning being preferable), or by the uncertain light of the moon flickering, it may be, through the high branches of gigantic trees. Early hours possess the double advantage of an improving light, for then a better aim may be taken, and during the daylight that succeeds the game may be more safely followed up, or a wounded animal recovered. But in the evening, the twilight being of so short a duration, a close shot is seldom to be obtained before the gloom of night sets in, and then tracking in the dark, or even looking for a wounded beast under such circumstances, is rarely successful, and is certainly neither safe nor pleasant work.

So far as our own experience enabled us to judge, we noticed that elephants preferred the open ridges and glades, situated, as a rule, on the higher lands, only seeking the swamps and low country for their daily favorite food, or, when they were to escape by bathing, from the persecution of the noxious insects with which the jungle is alive; a plague that by night tortures man and beast unmercifully. It is by night, of course, that the beasts of the forest chiefly come out to feed, travelling from one district to another, and roaming at large through their extensive dominion, taking everything in their course, and frequently bathing in the sea on their arrival at the coast-line. Seldom are they to be seen abroad during the daytime, taking as much care to avoid exposure in the open, and the discomfort occasioned by the intense heat of the sun, as if they were governed by the same laws that keep the Turkish women such close prisoners, or the ladies of the Imperial household so completely secluded in their palace at Peking.

While employed in the work of a running survey, we had occasion to land on the most easterly point of the whole island, "Tanjong Unsang," by name, and here we came upon the fresh tracks of a full-grown female and her young. That they had been there but a few hours previous to our landing was quite apparent, otherwise the rising tide would have obliterated their tracks, which led from a moderately clear part of the jungle along the sand and down across the narrow white beach to the sea, where, in the shallows of those transparent, clear, and inviting waters, they must have enjoyed a morning bath, totally devoid of all fear, and blissful ignorance of our immediate presence. We took no but for the sharks, crocodiles, and poisonous hydrophidæ, or water-snakes, might have indulged in a morning swim, just as we always did in waters less dangerous; but here it was not to be thought of.

According to our calculations made at the time, the mother and her calf must have performed their ablutions about 5 o'clock that morning, previous to seeking the shade of the forest for their day's siesta. A longer stay in that quarter might have enabled us to ascertain whether they were in the habit of visiting the seashore regularly, in order to bathe, or whether they preferred the fresh, but less cleanly, water of the rivers, to the briny wave itself, in which to enjoy their early douche.

Very little ivory is to be procured from these animals, and that little is of a most inferior quality, if we can depend on the accounts given of it by the foreigners residing in this island. But they were not in the habit of hunting themselves, and few white people who have lived any time in this country seem to possess energy enough to devote their time to a sporting tour alone; hence they probably form their ideas of the value of the ivory simply on statements made to them by the hunters of the surrounding villages.

There can be little doubt that, after the frequent disappointments and overwhelming discomforts which hunters undergo in these forests, the novelty of hunting begins to pall, and the possibility even of making so desirable a "coup" as the killing of a rogue elephant, is neither sport nor reward sufficient to tempt the white man to face them, enervated as he soon becomes by this trying climate.

The ivory here is not of much value; to see it in perfection one should visit the grand collection displayed in the palaces of Bangkok by His Royal Highness the King of Siam. Some of the sacred, and most of the royal war elephants in that country, carry tusks wonderfully fine, and it is not an uncommon sight to see a fractured tusk, of unusually large proportions, spliced and strengthened by bands of metal, which are slung and neatly welded on, for use as well as for ornament. On inquiry, we found the war elephants were used, in time of peace, for stacking the timber which forms so large and important an article of export in that country, and that the task, in its rough state, was floated down from the forests above "Ayuthia;" these immense logs being hauled ashore, carried, and stacked almost entirely by elephants. Hence, if too great a weight was attempted by them, a broken tusk would be the inevitable result, a disaster soon remedied by the splicing process described above, and which, when completed, proved the mended tusk to be of greater strength than it had been in its normal condition.

It is, however, a foregone conclusion that the elephants of Iugu and Birmah, from which latter country the Chinese specimens were procured, are of finer dimensions, and carry better ivory than the greater majority of their Asiatic brethren.—Daily's Magazine.

SHANGHAI TURF NOTES.

October 6th, 1882.

There was little dew this morning on the course, which was consequently fast going. In anticipation of rain to-morrow, (the usual galloping morning), some few owners extended their stud and the following is about the result:—
One mile and a half.—Tajmahal, Rose, and a grey. Time, 3min. 30sec., the two former pulling double.
Sweet Briar and Oriole.—3min. 36sec. for Sweet Briar; Oriole distanced.
Sunlight and a grey.—3min. 35sec., the former going easy.

One Mile.—White Thorn and Black Thorn 2min. 14sec., the last three-quarters, 1min. 38sec.
One Mile and Three-quarters.—Montezuma and Helios, 4min. 4sec. Dictator, 4min. 9sec.
Two Miles.—Mr. Risk's Strath-something, 4min. 42sec., Chiffney up, quite baked at the finish, carrying about 10lbs. under his St. Leger weight, and 17lbs. under his weight for inches. This pony has a fine stride, but seems quite unable to quicken when called upon and I do not think he has a "show" for any of the events for which he is entered. Owing to the accident to Mr. Fernando's Black Bird, Mr. Bill appears to have a walk over for the gliffin races, and as I hear there is a probability of three Frames being scratched, there is nothing that I have yet seen, able to make Mr. Bill's stable gallop.—Courier.

HAIR DRESSING SALOON
HONGKONG HOTEL.
W. P. MOORE begs to inform the Gentlemen of Hongkong and Visitors that he has reduced the price of Hair-Cutting to 50 cents.
Having now in his employ three competent Assistants who are always in attendance, he guarantees to execute this class of work, in all its branches, with a perfection which cannot be excelled in any part of the World.
Hair-Cutting.....50 Cents.
Shampooing.....25 Cents.
Shaving.....25 Cents.
Trimming Beards.....25 Cents.
MONTHLY CUSTOMERS TAKEN AT REDUCED RATES.
RAZORS MOST CAREFULLY RE-SET.
Mr. MOORE begs to recommend his GOGO SHAMPOO WASH
to the public as unparalleled by any preparation ever produced for promoting the growth of the hair. The basis of this compound is made of soap root; the natives of the Philippine Islands never use anything else for washing their hair; they are never found bald, and it is quite common to see the females with hair from 5 to 6 feet long. By constantly using this Shampoo Wash as directed, you will NEVER BE BALD.
The proprietor offers the Wash to the public entirely confident that by its restorative properties it will without fail arrest decaying hair. It completely eradicates scurf, dandruff, and cures all diseases of the scalp. It does not contain any poisonous drugs. By its cooling properties it allays the itching and fever of the scalp, which is the great cause of people losing their hair.
Mr. MOORE has succeeded in being able to put this wash up in bottles without allowing it to ferment, and he will guarantee it to keep any length of time in any climate. [516]
